

World Book Day

LO: I am getting better at creating my own pictures to go with my favourite story.

Have a look at the link below where the author and illustrator Rob Biddulph explain about the importance of good illustrations to go with a story. He starts to read a story called 'Blown Away' and talks about the little details he adds into his pictures.

Watching this made me think of comics and how the pictures in comics help to tell a story. Can you choose your favourite book? Once you have done this I would like you to use the template attached and see if you can choose a section or all of it and use your own illustrations to turn it into a comic book with illustrations. We have used speech marks and thought bubbles in English before so I think you will be confident in using these again.

Alternatively, why not use the template to write your own short story comic book style.

I look forward to seeing your comic books.

(For some of you I think you would prefer to write your own short story, you can do this and think about the illustrations you might use to make it more appealing to the reader.)
